"TWO STONES WITH ONE BIRD"
Round Four of "Fighting Blood"

by

H.C. Witwer

Gale Galen, a small town youth, is training for his second professional fight. He lives at the Wilcox home in Drew City, which houses, in addition to Mrs. Wilcox, her daughter Judy, Nate Shapiro, Gale's manager; and K.O. Kelly, Gale's trainer. It is Gale's birthday and in the midst of a general celebration he is presented with a silk kimona by Judy, with instructions to wear it in the ring.

Gale celebrates by taking his friends to an amusement park. Judy and he go in a ferris wheel, and while they are in the air, Rags Dempster, a rival of Gale's hires a thug to break the wheel's machinery, thus keeping Gale in the air and preventing him from fighting that night. The thug accomplishes his mission and while Shapiro is looking all over for his prize battler, the hours slip by. Finally Gale climbs down the trellice work, and rushes to the fight. The thugs try to stop him, but after a battle, he arrives at the ringside just in time. He hastily dresses and enters the ring, defeating his opponent in one round.

The mob has paid for ten rounds and want their money's worth, so Gale is willing to continue against anyone they may select. Out steps a big husky. For three rounds they battle ferociously, and Gale get the worst of it. Shapiro wants to throw up the sponge, but Gale's "fighting blood" shows itself and he keeps on until he has stretched his opponent prostrate. But instead of taking a need rest, he rushes from the ringside through the streets, back to the ferris wheel. He climbs up hand over hand until he reaches Judy, who is still imprisoned high in the air. Just as he gets there and is perfectly satisfied to stay there indefinitely, the machinery is fixed and they are brought down to earth.

The End.
